

As an amateur radio operator for only 2 months, I have not seen the many changes of previous license structures, however, it appears that most of them have resulted in a better service. I strongly support the ARRL proposal for restructuring. I believe it is time for the Morse code requirement to be eliminated for all but the highest class of license. This is not so I can be advanced to a General class without the code. As a matter of fact I will take that exam this weekend. I just believe that Morse code should not be the "holy grail" of amateur radio. Recognition by a number of other nations that Morse should not be required is indicative of the feeling of many radio amateurs. This proposed plan is a good compromise for the amateur radio service.
